Report on Training Session on "Active based Learning" for different subject 04/09/2021

A Training session on active based learning for different learning was organized for B.Ed. students on 04/09/2021. Session is based on constructivism, a learning theory that asserts that learners construct their own understanding of a topic by building upon their prior knowledge. Implementing active learning therefore means shifting the focus of instruction away from knowledge transmission to learners' knowledge construction through the creation of guided tasks, interactions, assignments, and environments that cultivate deep, meaningful learning. A closely related theory—social constructivism—holds that active learning best takes place when the construction of knowledge occurs in collaboration with others

He introduced active learning is related to other instructional methods that closely involve students in the knowledge constructions process, including student-centered learning, where the diverse learning needs of students, rather than the need to push through content, are at the centre of the learning process

He elaborated problem-based learning, where students are given a problem or scenario that requires students to formulate questions, analyze evidence, connect evidence to pre-existing theories, derive conclusions, and reflect on their learning

Experiential learning, where students learn by engaging in authentic learning activities, that is, ones that replicate situations or problems they might encounter in real life or in a work situation

Active learning fosters understanding rather than memorization of facts; it encourages students to apply learning to different problems and contexts; it gives students more autonomy over their learning; and it helps students learn how to learn.

At end of the program Dr. Surendra Kumar Tiwari, was conducted active based learning on their different pedagogy subject with B.Ed. students.
